Dangerous For Dictators

Are the Soviet leaders helping to dig their own graves by improving the education of the people?

Allen W. Dulles, director of the U. S. Central Intelligence Agency, thinks so.

He raises an interesting point. The very training of a human mind encourages that mind to become curious. It learns to weigh facts and wonder about things. Even people taught along the pro-Communist lines laid down by the Kremlin may thus begin to sense the lies and distortions they are being fed. Add the instinct for personal freedom that abides in us all and the Soviet bosses might have very dangerous foes in their midst.

Communism lives on lies; education seeks the truth. Yet Russia cannot hold its own in this technical age without education. In the 1950 to 1960 period she will graduate from her universities 1,200,000 in the science field alone. Can she keep them all in line as intellectual robots?
